DanteNet Site on the Web

Acting on recommendations of the Publications Committee, the Council at its meeting in New Orleans on November 12 has undertaken to launch a home-page on the WWW. Besides providing links to numerous sites that offer access to Dante material and resources, the site will also provide a forum for discussion in several distinct areas. It will host the Electronic Bulletin of the DSA (EBDSA), which

Dante Studies volume 112 (1994) is scheduled to be published and sent to members by the end of will publish notes concerning Dantean texts. The notes may be philological or interpretive in nature, and will be limited to a length of 1,000 words. Submissions, to be made electronically, will be refereed, and may be in English or Italian. Other areas will include queries pertaining to Dante's works and their interpretation, discussions of the notes published in the EBDSA, posting of information about conferences, publications, and other matters, and comments.

Robert Hollander will serve as editor and be assisted by an Editorial Board consisting of Teodolinda Barolini, Richard Lansing, Christopher Kleinhenz, and Lino Pertile. The target date for the opening of DanteNet is spring 1996. Readers are invited to send material at any time, beginning now, to the Editor, at the following email address:

Inferno on the Web

Members may be interested in browsing the newly established World-Wide-Web home page for the Inferno edited and translated by Robert M. Durling, with introduction and notes by Ronald L. Martinez and R. M. Durling (to be published by Oxford University Press this fall). The table of contents, preface, part of the introduction, and the text, translation, and notes for Canto 1 are posted. The URL address is:

<http://hum.ucsc.edu/~durling/home.html>.

International Dante Directory

A directory of names, addresses, and phone numbers was sent to members with the fall Newsletter and dues notice for 1996. It collects information taken from the membership lists of the DSA, the Società Dantesca Italiana, and the Deutsche Dante-Gesellschaft, along with independent scholars in England and elsewhere. Since it is vital to keep up-to-date information on file, members are encouraged to list new and additional data on the back side of the dues notice for the coming year.
